

SEC

They have a similitude or contrariety to the secretious humours in taste and quality. Floyer on the Humours.
SECRETIST. n. f. [from secret.] A dealer in secrets.
 Some things I have not yet thought fit so plainly to reveal, not out of any envious design of having them buried with me, but that I may barter with those secretists, that will not part with one secret but in exchange for another. Boyle.
SECRETLY. adv. [from secret.] Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; not so as to be known.
 Give him this letter, do it secretly. Shakespeare.
 Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.
 Now secretly with inward grief he join'd;
 Now warm resentments to his griefs he join'd. Addison.
 Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions. Atterbury.
SECRETNESS. n. f. [from secret.]
 1. State of being hidden.
 2. Quality of keeping a secret.
 I could muster up
 My giants and my witches too,
 Which are vast constancy and secretness. Dante.
SECRETORY. adj. [from secretus, Latin.] Performing the office of secretion.
 All the glands are a congeries of vessels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Roy.
SECT. n. f. [secte, French; secta, Latin, from secundando.]
 1. A body of men following some particular master, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.
 We'll wear out,
 In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
 That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shakespeare, King Lear.
 The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects and religions: the true religion is built upon the rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. Bacon's Essays.
 The jealous sects that dare not trust their cause
 So far from their own will as to the laws,
 You for their empire and their synod take. Dryden.
 The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness. Dryden.
 A sect of free thinkers is a fum of ciphers. Bentley.
 2. In Shakespeare it seems to be misprinted for set.
 Of our unbitted lusts, I take this that you call love to be a sect or cion. Shakespeare, Othello.
SECTARISM. n. f. [from sect.] Disposition to petty sects in opposition to those established.
 Nothing hath more marks of schism and sectarism than this presbyterian way. King Charles.
SECTARY. n. f. [sectaire, French; from sect.]
 1. One who divides from publick establishment, and joins with those distinguished by some particular whims.
 My lord, you are a sectary,
 That's the plain truth. Shakespeare.
 Romish catholic tenets are inconsistent, on the one hand, with the truth of religion professed and protected by the church of England; whence we are called protestants; and the anabaptists, and separatists, and sectaries, on the other hand, whose tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.
 The number of sectaries does not concern the clergy in point of interest or conscience. Swift.
 2. A follower; a pupil.
 The sectaries of my celestial skill,
 That wont to be the world's chief ornament,
 And learned imps that wont to shoot up still,
 They under keep. Spenser.
SECTATOR. n. f. [sectateur, Fr. sectator, Latin.] A follower; an imitator; a disciple.
 Hereof the wiser sort and the best learned philosophers were not ignorant, as Cicero witnesseth, gathering the opinion of Aristotle and his sectators. Raleigh.
SECTION. n. f. [section, French; sectio, Latin.]
 1. The act of cutting or dividing.
 In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Watson.
 2. A part divided from the rest.
 3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.
 Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hobbes.
 The production of volatile salts I reserve 'till I mention them in another section. Boyle.
 Without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.
SECTOR. n. f. [secteur, French.] In geometry.
Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematics, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle, bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.

SEC

SECULAR. adj. [secularis, Latin; seculier, French.]
 1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.
 This in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral; in publick and politick secular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hobbes.
 Then shall they seek 't' avail themselves of names,
 Places, and titles; and with these to join
Secular pow'r, though feigning still to act
 By spiritual. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.
 Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby ease to the clergy both secular and regular. Temple.
 In France vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.
 3. [Seculaire, Fr.] Happening or coming once in a secul or century.
 The secular year was kept but once in a century. Addison.
SECULARITY. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.
 Little and secularity of spirit is the greatest enemy to contemplation. Barnes's Theory of the Earth.
 To SECULARIZE. v. a. [seculariser, Fr. from secular.]
 1. To convert from spiritual appropriations to common use.
 2. To make worldly.
SECULARLY. adv. [from secular.] In a worldly manner.
SECULARNESS. n. f. [from secular.] Worldliness.
SECUNDINE. n. f. [secundine, secundes, Fr. secundus, viz. partu quod nascitur infans sequitur.] Ainw. The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the after-birth.
 The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or calv, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon's Nat. History.
 Future ages lie
 Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine asleep. Caval.
 If the fetus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundine, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Roy.
SECURE. adj. [securus, Latin.]
 1. Free from fear; exempt from terror; easy; assured.
 Confidence then bore thee on secure
 To meet no danger. Milton.
 One maid the had, belov'd above the rest;
Secure of her, the secret she confest. Dryden.
 In Lethe's lake souls long oblivion taste;
 Of future life secure, forgetful of the past. Dryden.
 But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes;
 The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.
 We live and act as if we were perfectly secure of the final event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.
 The portion of their wealth they design for the uses of the poor, they may throw into one of these publick repositories, secure that it will be well employed. Atterbury.
 It concerns the most secure of his strength, to pray to God not to expose him to an enemy. Rogers.
 2. Careless; wanting caution; wanting vigilance.
 3. Free from danger; safe.
 Let us not then suspect our happy state,
 As not secure to single or combin'd. Milton.
 Messapus next,
Secure of steel, and fated from the fire,
 In pomp appears. Dryden.
 4. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.
 Haply too secure of our discharge
 From penalty. Milton.
 Secure from fortune's blows,
 Secure of what I cannot lose, Dryden's Horace.
 In my small pinnacle I can fail.
 To SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.
 Nothing left
 That might his happy state secure,
 Secure from outward force. Milton.
 I spread a cloud before the victor's sight,
 Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secure his flight;
 Ev'n then secure him, when I fought with joy
 The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryden.
 Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.
 Truth

SED

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.
 That prince who shall be so wise as by established laws of liberty to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind, against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.
 Deeper to wound, the fluns the fight;
 She drops her arms to gain the field:
Secure her conquest by her flight,
 And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.
 Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Brome.
 2. To protect; to make safe.
 Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.
 3. To insure.
 4. To make fast.
SECURELY. adv. [from secure.] Without fear; carelessly; without danger; safely.
 Love, that had now long time securely slept
 In Venus' lap, unarmed then and naked,
 'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being waked. Spenser.
 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
 A little proudly, and great deal misprising
 The knight oppos'd. Shakespeare, Troilus and Cressida.
 His daring foe securely him defy'd.
 A foul that can securely death defy,
 And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryden's Juven.
 We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
 And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
 From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
 And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.
 Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent, I securely leave to the judgment of the reader. Atterbury.
SECUREMENT. n. f. [from secure.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.
 They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained a securment from it. Brown.
SECURITY. n. f. [securitas, Fr. securitas, Lat. from secure.]
 1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
 Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.
 2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
 There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships acurst. Shakespeare.
 How senseless then, and dead a soul hath he,
 Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
 Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,
 That he might fin with more security. Davies.
 3. Protection; defence.
 If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed? Tillotson.
 4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing.
 When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts xvii 9.
 It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite; but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.
 Exchange bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities. Swift's Examiner.
 The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbutnot on Coins.
 5. Safety; certainty.
 Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alleged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.
SEDAN. n. f. [from sedes, Latin.] A kind of portable coach; a chair.
 Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
 Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
 And for their wives produce an empty chair.
 By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament and sedan, exceeding 121 l. 1 s. 10 d. half-penny, should pay 30 s. in the hundred pound value. Arbutnot.
SEDATE. adj. [sedatus, Latin.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed; serene.
 With countenance calm and soul sedate,
 Thus Turnus.
 Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.
SEDATILY. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly; without disturbance.
 That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.
SEDATENESS. n. f. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

SED

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action. Addison on the War.
SEDENTARINESS. n. f. [from sedentary.] The state of being sedentary; inactivity.
SEDENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, French; sedentarius, Italian; sedentarius, from sedes, Latin.]
 1. Palsed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.
 A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant. Harvey on Consumptions.
 The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than of those who live a sedentary life. Arbutnot.
 2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.
 The sedentary earth,
 That better might with far less compass move,
 Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion. Milton.
 'Till length of years
 And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
 To a contemptible old age obscure. Milton's Agonistes.
 The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions. Addison's Spectator.
SEDE. n. f. [sedes, Saxon; whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sed or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.
 'T' one layeth for turf and for sedge. Tusser.
 The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
 Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
 But when his fair course is not hindered,
 He makes sweet music with th' enamel'd stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
 He overtakes in his pilgrimage;
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakespeare.
 Adonis, painted by a running brook,
 And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
 Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
 Even as the waving sedes play with wind. Shakespeare.
 In hotter countries a fly called lucciole, that shineth as the glow-worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.
 He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.
 My bonds I brake,
 Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
 Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.
 Niphates, with inverted urn,
 And drooping sedes, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.
SEDEY. adj. [from sedes.] Overgrown with narrow flags.
 On the gentle Severn's sed, bank,
 In single opposition, hand to hand,
 He did confront the best part of an hour,
 In changing handment with great Glendower. Shak. H. IV.
 Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
 But fear'd the fate of Simois would return:
 Deep in his ooze he sought his sedes bed,
 And thrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryden.
SEDIMENT. n. f. [sediment, French; sedimentum, Lat.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.
 The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Bacon's Nat. History.
 It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South's Sermons.
 That matter lunk not down 'till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. H. Edwards.
SEDITION. n. f. [sedition, Fr. seditio, Latin.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.
 That sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
 That wail'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
 And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shak. H. VI.
 In soothing them we nourish, 'gainst our senate,
 The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak. Coriolanus.
SEDITIOUS. adj. [seditiosus, Fr. seditiosus, Latin.] Factious with tumult; turbulent.
 The cause, why I have brought this army hither,
 Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
 Sedition to his grace and to the state. Shakespeare, H. VI.
 Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this sedition behaviour. Clarendon.
 Thou return'st
 From flight, sedition angel.
 But if he has deform'd this earthly life
 With murderous rapine and sedition strife,
 In everlasting darkness must he lie;
 Still more unhappy that the cannot die. Prior.
SEDITIOUSLY. adv. [from sedition.] Tumultuously; with factious turbulence.
SEDITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from sedition.] Turbulence; disposition to sedition.